rest today for the first time since the football season began.

Disappointed but not down-hearted by their 7 to 3 defeat at the hands of Hampden-Sidney College, the William and Mary College players will now prepare for the important game with Richmond College, in Richmond, Satlirday. This contest should have all the earmarks of a great battle, with one touchdown deciding the outcome for either team.

The Indians' defense is such that followers of the Orange and Black have faith in Driver's eleven. The Tigers, when they had the ball on the Indians' four-yard line, had to plunge four times

Faith in Driver's eleven. The Tigers, when they had the ball on the Indians' four-yard line, had to plunge four times before they carried the ball over. And the Tigers have the best backfield in the Eastern Virginia Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

Julian Brooks, quarterback, whose shoulder was dislocated here last week probably will be in shape for the Richmond College game. He is eager to return, and his fighting spirit will improve the morale of the team. Davies ankle is improving and he also will be available for quarterback duty.

With three teams tied for leadership and Hampden-Sidney having an easy lime with Randolph-Macon this week on paper, the Spiders and Indians will stage a hard fight to survive at the top. One-half of the championship journey has been traversed.

The Indians knew how the Spiders fight in Richmond, and Coach Driver has his cohorts keyed up for the big game. As the game Saturday will be of championship hue, Boulevard Field will be the scene of an interesting. In not thrilling, gridiron affair.

[Special to The Dispat There will be no more nine-game world's series. Such is the announcement that comes out from Cincinnati, apparently on the word of Garry Herrmann, the man who urged the idea and won his point despite the opposition of Charley Comiskey, whose club battled klerrmann's in the recent series. The secheme did not work out up to the expectations of Herrmann, but instead it developed certain features that proved decidedly unsatisfactory. As a recent there is little likelihood of it being attempted again.

If the seven-game system had been followed this year the series would have followed this year the series would have been the same. It might be added that in nineteen out of twenty cases the club winning in nine games also would win under the seven-game arrangement. The various clubs profited to a considerable extent by the prolongation of the series, the players got close to $1,000 more than they would have releved under the former plan, and yet there is no disposition to repeat the performance. makes some interesting conclusions, as follows:

"Sallee started to pitch and his foot hung in some manner, which caused him to lose his balance. He stumbled forward, with the motion of pitching, but did not deliver the ball, which made a plain balk, and Umpire Billy Evans behind the plate ordered Weaver to stroll to third from his seat on second base.

"On the face of the returns Sallee had gotten himself into a tight corner, but the balk probably saved the day for him. When Weaver went to third Roush played thirty to forty feet deeper in center for Felsch than he palyed when Weaver was on second. The reason was that he knew he could not throw out Weaver at the plate on a single to center when Weaver was on third, but he had a chance to do so when Weaver was on second.

"Felsch hit a terrific liner fly smack over Roush's head. Roush ran like a deer for the center-field fence, and when about ten feet from there he turned, threw up his hands and grabbed the ball out of the air as it was sailing pat his dome. He did not have an luch to spare in speed or distance, and if he had not been playing deeper with Weaver on third than he would have played with Weaver on second, he would never have mad the catch, Weaver would have scored and Felsch would have had a two or three-base hit. A more interesting point never arose in a world's series' game."

CHANGE HOME-RUN RULE

DENY BATTER CREDIT NOW UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS

Public Wants Regulations Modified Pertaining to Circuit Clout in Closing Frame.

Pertaining to Circuit Cloud in Closing Frame.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Ban Johnson's NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Ban Johnson's call for a meeting of the rules committee of the two leagues should result in much good. There are many minor points in scoring and playing rules which might be changed, even though the greater part of the baseball code hardly could be improved upon. One rule that should be altered is that referring to a home run.

Under the rules now in effect a bataman who hits the bail out of the park in the final inning of a close game sometimes gets only a single for his feat, simply because a base runner occupies third base when the hit is made, he might get a double or a triple, according to conditions which prevail at the time the hit is made, but if there are enough runners on the bases to settle the game without his score, he does not get credit for a home run.

This rule, providing that a game should end with the scoring of enough runs to break a tie, might be changed to advantage for the benefit of the home-run hitter. He should be allowed to complete the circuit any time he hits far enough, regardless of the base runners ahead of him or the score at the time. There is no particular reason why a game should not end with the score, 4 to 2. for instance, if a batsman clouts a homer in the ninth with the score tied and a runner on base. His performance is denied part of the credit due to it when he has to accept single, double or triple for a bona fide home run.

When Babe Ruth was closing in on some home-run records of other years during the latter part of the recent campaign, this point was brought up. Suppose Ruth, after tying the best mark of previous years, hit a bail into the stands in a close game with a runner ahead of him on base and one run needed to win the game? He could not be credited with a home run under the present system. It might be argued that Williamson, Froeman, Cravath and other home-run hitters worked under the same handleap. This is true, but that does
